BIG PICTURE—As crowds gather just to the north to photograph a sunset over the Tetons, Shane Kapper and Sabrina Gast find a quiet spot to themselves alongside Kappler's dog, Kiro, on Monday, Sept. 12, at Grand Teton National Park's Snake River Overlook. The overlook was popularized by famed Western landscape photographer Ansel Adams, whose 1942 photograph "Tetons and the Snake River" has drawn countless numbers of people from around the world to experience the majesty of the Teton Range for themselves. Adams' photograph from this spot was one of 115 images sent into deep space aboard the Voyager in September 1977.

BARN OWL—The Teton Raptor Center has a new avian ambassador, a barn owl that was brought to the facility last fall as a chick. The bird was in poor condition when it arrived, but made a remarkable physical recovery over the following months. Unfortunately the bird is almost completely deaf, which makes hunting virtually impossible. The center was then given approval to keep the owl as an educational bird.

BOAT LIFT—Sitkans watch from shore as the tug Powhatan is hauled up near Old Sitka Monday, June 12, 2017. The 85-foot tug sank April 19 at the dock and slid 1,500-feet off an underwater ledge to a depth of around 160-feet. Divers, who were able to spend only 20 minutes at a stretch before needing to return to their dive boat and a decompression chamber, spent the past weeks getting the boat ready to raise. The tug, estimated at around 400-tons, was placed on a salvage barge to be hauled away for scrap. The cause of the sinking is still being determined.
